

HOW TO CITE, IN APA FORM, AN ARTICLE OUT OF A FULL-TEXT DATABASE SUBSCRIBED TO BY THE MOORPARK COLLEGE LIBRARY

When using an article reprinted in one of our electronic indexes, you will cite it in a way that lets your reader know precisely where you found the information. The following are some examples of suggested methods of citation you may want to use in your "References" page:

Author. (date). Title of the article. Name of the periodical, vol. number, pages.

Retrieved (date you viewed the article), from (name of the electronic index) database.

If you used the General OneFile :

Here is an example of a citation to a full-text journal article:

Dixon, C. (2004). Plus/minus grading: If given a choice. College Student Journal, 38, 280. Retrieved January 10, 2008, from General OneFile database.

If you used eLibrary:

Here is an example of a citation to a full-text magazine article:

Fisher, A. (2003, July 7). I'm working as hard as I can, but it's not enough for my boss. Fortune, 148, 154. Retrieved January 10, 2008, from eLibrary database.

If you used Proquest National Newspapers:

Here is an example of a citation to a full-text newspaper article:

Ginsberg, S., & Morello, C. (2005, January 7). As hybrid cars multiply, so do carpooling gripes. Washington Post, p. A1. Retrieved January 10, 2008, from Proquest National Newspapers database.
